

Visit to Art Museum – ‘The Kunj’

I am very happy to share my wonderful experience as a parent volunteer during our visit to the art museum with the children on 27th.

The day began in the classroom with free play time. The children were happily engaged with different toys such as blocks, cards, cars, and the doll house. It was lovely to see them sharing, building, and using their imagination. After some time, the teacher played the clean-up song, and all the children responsibly collected the toys and kept them back in their proper places.

Next was circle time. The teacher asked the children to sit in a circle and had a general discussion with them. She informed them that we were going to visit an art museum today. She showed them two paintings and interacted with them about art and museums. The children were very curious and excited. The teacher also gave clear instructions such as being quiet, staying together, and not touching the exhibits.

After circle time, the children had their tiffin's and used the washrooms. Soon, we boarded the bus. During the journey, the children sang rhymes joyfully. On the way, they excitedly noticed a fire truck with its loud siren and even spotted a cow on the road. Their excitement made the journey even more enjoyable.

We finally reached The Kunj Art Museum. After arriving, the teachers carefully counted the children before entering. The museum was truly an amazing place filled with beautiful artworks. One of the most striking displays was 100 sarees hanging together, showcasing a variety of bright and beautiful colours. There was also a wall of colourful guardian masks, each unique and artistic. Fabric flowers in vibrant shades added charm to the space. Even the sitting area, including tables and chairs, was creatively decorated with artistic designs.

The children enjoyed observing the murals, paintings, statues, and handicrafts. Everything around us reflected creativity and culture.

After exploring the museum, the children participated in an art session. Inspired by what they had seen, they drew and coloured flowers beautifully. It was wonderful to see their creativity come alive.

Once the session was over, the teachers gathered the children, and took a roll call before we boarded the bus to return to school. After reaching school, the children picked up their bags, refreshed themselves, and it was time to go home. Overall, it was a fantastic experience. The children not only enjoyed the trip but also learned so much about art and museums. I truly had a great time and thoroughly enjoyed being part of this memorable day,
